

In the past few weeks, a communication was sent regarding E-learning Days. These are days where students learn remotely. These may be used up to 5 days per school year in place of a weather cancellation day and functions similarly to distance learning. We wanted to take the opportunity to communicate a quick clarification regarding the use of e-learning days. In the event school needs to be closed due to winter weather, the first two days of closure for the school year will be traditional “snow days” where students do not have school and are not responsible for any learning or assignments. Should additional weather cancellations occur, the next five potential days of closure will be e-learning days where students would have assignments and be responsible for learning. Whether a day is considered a “snow day” or an e-learning day will be clearly communicated to families through our messaging system via phone and email.
